To investigate the clinical characteristics of amyotrophic lateral sclerosis (ALS) patients with C9orf72 hexanucleotide repeat expansions and to explore the clinical significance of genetic testing. The clinical data and genetic testing results of 34 ALS patients with C9orf72 hexanucleotide repeat expansions from April 2016 to April 2017 were retrospectively analyzed. The proportion of confirmed ALS patients with C9orf72 hexanucleotide repeat expansions in this study (27.3%, 8/29) was higher than that (14.8%, 51/359) reported in the world. In the 17 ALS patients with C9orf72 hexanucleotide repeat expansions, the mean age of onset was 45.1±10.3, the first symptom of distal symmetrical limb weakness predominated in the 15 patients who were examined, and the disease duration was 4.3±2.5 months. And all the 17 patients were examined for SOD1 gene. There was no correlation between C9orf72 hexanucleotide repeat expansions and phenotype of ALS. After gene screening of SOD1 and C9orf72, the results of SOD1 gene mutation were negative in 20 patients. The co-occurrence rate of C9orf72 and SOD1 in patients was 27.3% (8/29). C9orf72 hexanucleotide repeat expansions are not associated with ALS patients clinically. It is necessary to carry out gene screening of C9orf72 and SOD1 to improve the diagnosis of ALS.// // Generated by class-dump 3.5 (64 bit) (Debug version compiled Jun 9 2015 22:53:21). // // class-dump is Copyright (C) 1997-1998, 2000-2001, 2004-2014 by Steve Nygard. // #import "TButton.h" @interface TQuickActionButton :

Photo: RNZ The city's roads will now have a zero tolerance to people not wearing seatbelts, even if someone in a crash is wearing one. The previous policy was for drivers to yield the right of way to people in crashes who are wearing seatbelts and those without. Cr Alistair Scott said it was "the right policy," and the new one was a "stray away from that". "We are saying it's business as usual - we are not losing that particular initiative," Mr Scott said. The new policy also requires drivers to stop and look left and right in case a pedestrian was there before they entered an intersection, even if they are in a crash. As well as introducing that new section to the policy, the council voted to keep the existing section requiring drivers to not overtake on the right, and to keep the law's existing rules on putting trucks on roads. Cr Scott said council was going to have an examination into traffic patterns in the city, and there was no intention to move to a system of "respecting" or "helping" pedestrians as he believed that was already the case. "If the council doesn't want to re-examine that policy it is their prerogative to do so, but it will be in review over the next 12 months," he said. The council's legal advice was that the current seatbelt law did not fit within the city's planning documents. Cr Scott said the council had no intention of taking any actions to make streets more pedestrian-friendly, as the city had no such powers, and said this was all about "balance". "As the democratically-elected government we cannot install infrastructure, the council can only decide in terms of traffic management, but that
